TRAVELLING IN ALBANIA

There are about 18,000 km of road in Albania, including about 3,700 km of National Main Streets and 11,000 km of district and municipal roads. The primary road network is about 1,200 km with nine main links. The government continues to make substantial investments in road improvements, and there new highways in process of construction. In any case if you drive in Albania, please exercise caution and regard carefully the traffic laws. Better avoid travelling at night outside the main urban areas as road hazards are more difficult to see. It is illegal to drive under the influence of alcohol and drugs and to use a cell phone while driving.

Traffic travels on the right side of the road, as in most other European countries. Unless posted signs indicate otherwise, there is a 50km/h speed limit in urban centers and 90km/h limit in the National Streets.

Other useful information

Albania is a parliamentary democracy with European aspirations and a market-oriented economic system. Albania is one of the smallest countries on earth with 28,700 square kilometers (11,000 sq mi) of area, ranking 143rd. In 2014, Albania has an estimated population of 3.1 million, an increase from 2013's 3.02 million, and is the 132nd most populous country in the world. The Albanian people are very tolerant, hospitable and their attitude to western countries is overwhelmingly positive. Public security is generally good, particularly in Tirana. Foreign embassies advice generally to apply normal security precautions. Tourist facilities are steadily improving and hotel accommodation is plentiful in Tirana and in other major cities. In smaller towns and villages out of tourist centers the accommodation offer is limited and often at a simple standard. Most Albanians speak Italian and English is widely spoken in the cities.

The Albanian monetary unit is called Lek (plural Lekë). Banknotes come in denominations of 5000, 2000, 1000, 500, 200, Lekë. The currency floats freely but is quite stable. The exchange rates for foreign currencies are available in newspapers and at exchange bureaus; As in September 2014: 1000 Albanian Lekë = 7,20 euro =  $9.30\ US\ dollar = 5.70\ Pound\ Major\ credit\ and\ debit\ cards\ are\ accepted\ in\ most\ banks,\ large\ supermarkets\ and$ international hotels. Smaller businesses often only accept cash. There are numerous ATMs in Tirana and the main towns, as well as bureaux de change where US Dollars, Sterling Pounds and Euros are widely accepted. Although street money-changers operate openly, they do so illegally. Only use banks or established bureaux de change. Traveler's cheques are not widely used but can be changed at banks in larger towns or cities. Be aware when talking prices in Albania, specifically at markets, that many people still continue to refer to the "old Lekë" system, with one more zero at the end. So a kilo of apples may well cost 100 or 200 Lekë but not 1000!

OPENING HOURS

Commercial opening hours are very liberal in Albania. Most shops in bigger cities and tourist centers are open 7 days a week and at least from 9.00 to 20.00. In villages shops may be closed on Sundays but usually there is always an open grocery store to be found. Governmental agencies, post and banks are closed on Saturdays and Sundays.

Pharmacies ("farmaci" with a green cross sign) can be found in all towns, most of them modern and well equipped. Their staff is well trained and usually speaks good English. Doctors and dentists can easily be found throughout Albania, both in hospitals and in private practice.

POSTAL SYSTEM AND PHONE CALLS

Albanian post offices are recognized by their yellow and blue colour signs which read "PTT" and can be found all over the country. They deliver reliable postal services all over the world. The central post office operates from 7:30 to 20.00, Monday to Saturday. The free phone number for information and services is: +355 800 4141.

In addition to regular services, they offer an express delivery option called EMS Express. To use this service, contact the post office via the free phone given above or: Phone: +355 42 455749 Fax: +355 42 455750
